3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

VERIZON, UNION AGREE ON PAY RAISES, NEW JOBS TO END STRIKE

A tentative agreement between Verizon Communications and unions to end a nearly seven-week strike includes 1,400 new jobs and pay raises topping 10 percent, the company and unions representing about 40,000 workers said on Monday. Verizon, the No. 1 U.S. wireless provider, and the Communications Workers of America had reached a tentative deal on Friday. Details for the new four-year contract were disclosed on Monday. The CWA said Verizon agreed to provide a 10.9 percent raise over four years while Verizon put the increase at 10.5 percent. It was not immediately clear why the two sides reported different percentages. Nearly 40,000 network technicians and customer service representatives of the company's Fios Internet, telephone and television services units walked off the job on April 13. REUTERS

SHOOTING RAMPAGE IN HOUSTON LEAVES TWO DEAD, SIX WOUNDED

2 Police in Houston killed a gunman on Sunday in a chaotic shootout that left one other person dead, six wounded — including two officers — and set off a fire at a nearby gas station when bullets struck a gas pump, authorities said. Witnesses reported that a gunman approached a man who had just pulled up to an auto detail shop and opened fire with a pistol, police spokesman John Cannon said. "It appears that it was a random, unprovoked attack," Cannon said. The victim, a male in his 50s, died, he said. The gunman fired on the first officer to respond to the scene, riddling his car with bullets, including many that struck the windshield, Cannon said. REUTERS

JAPAN ON ALERT FOR POSSIBLE NORTH KOREA MISSILE LAUNCH

3 Japan put its military on alert on Monday for a possible North Korean ballistic missile firing, while South Korea also said it had detected evidence of launch preparations, officials from Japan and South Korea said. Tension in the region has been high since North Korea conducted its fourth nuclear test in January and followed that with a satellite launch and test launches of various missiles. Japan ordered naval destroyers and Patriot anti-ballistic missile batteries to be ready to shoot down any projectile heading for Japan, Japan's NHK state broadcaster said. A Japanese official, who declined to be identified as he is not authorized to speak to the media, confirmed the order. A spokesmen for Japan's defense ministry declined to comment. REUTERS

HOT WEEKEND, HOT SUMMER AHEAD

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

We had an early blast of summer over the past few days as the mercury soared to 90 degrees in many locations throughout the Northeast, along with an early season tropical storm named Bonnie.

Bonnie was the second-named storm this season — Hurricane Alex formed way back in January.

Keep in mind the hurricane season doesn't officially start until June 1 and continues through Nov. 30.

My long-range hurricane outlook for 2016 was published in Metro back in April. I predicted a very active one, going against the majority of the hurricane experts who are predicting a below-average to average hurricane season.

The summer ahead should be an unseasonably hot one, as once dominant El Niño (warming of the equatorial Pacific) is rapidly cooling and transforming into La Niña, just the opposite of El Niño. Past weather climatology indicates that La Niña episodes normally translate into hot summers here in the Northeast, but there are other factors as well.

Global warming will add more fuel to the fire. (Yes, global warming is real and our extremes in weather will continue to be unprecedented during our lifetimes and beyond.) The Atlantic Ocean water temperature is heading above normal, which will keep coastal areas a bit above normal.

One of my concerns with La Niña is that it actually releases the lid that El Niño puts on the hurricane season by stifling tropical development. La Niña will enhance tropical development. So lather up with sunscreen and be prepared to sweat your thermometer off.

Gen Z was born knowing how to Google. ISTOCK

Is the workforce ready for Gen Z?

They're pragmatic, risky and they don't expect loyalty from their employers. What does "iGen" have to lose?

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

The next generation has come of age, and they're already being analyzed and picked apart.

Enter Generation Z — aka iGen — those born between 1995 and 2012. As the first Gen Z college grads enter the workforce, here's what career experts shared about their values and goals.

1 They're always on

For Gen Z-ers, the term "digital native" is almost quaint.

"What's different are the expectations," says Louis Gaglini, associate director of employer engagement at Boston College's career center. "On my part, and on the part of employers, if I put something out on social media, and if you [students] missed it, it means you either missed it intentionally because you're not interested, or you missed it because you're not in the game."

They also consider early exposure as important, if not more, as economic gain, says Kelly Ahn, director of career services at The New School.

"As Gen Z values community-sharing and experience-based learning, they utilize these platforms as a way to connect with people who cannot offer monetary pay but are interested in a service exchange, or with people who are interested in collaborative projects," says Ahn.

In other words, Gen Z has the tools to bypass traditional gatekeepers. Are you listening, aspiring entrepreneurs and creative types?

2 They're more practical — and they take more risks

Gen Z had a somewhat bifurcated economic experience growing up. They came of age during a period of economic calamity — while "unicorn" startups like Facebook and Instagram made unexpected entrepreneurs billionaires before their 30th birthdays.

But Z-ers are pragmatic too, says Ahn.

"They've also seen the evolution of entrepreneurs, where some make it big and others may carry on mixing various careers, continuing their passion in subsequent projects. What is perceived to be risky or disruptive has changed for this generation."

3 They don't expect loyalty

"People in career centers understand that the people graduating now will likely have as many as five or six career paths, and as many as 20 to 25 jobs before they retire. And that's accepted," says Gaglini.

Gen Z tends to see other aspects of traditional workplaces — like a structured work schedule and reporting hierarchy — as unnecessary or irrelevant.

"They tend to split tasks where the line between work and play blurs," Ahn says.

Now can we please stop obsessing over millennials?

Instagram celebrity cat helping victims of domestic violence

Owner Jen Rice with her cat Kyle DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN/METRO

There is no shortage of cats on the Internet, a vast storehouse of pictures, videos, image macros and animated GIFs of the furry companions. The cutest among them can even gain celebrity status, racking up thousands of followers eager to see more of the world's grumpiest and dopiest mugs.

One of those meowing celebrities is Boston's Kyle, an exotic shorthair with a white mustache, an off-kilter ear, twin wild patches of untameable whiskers and an apparent willingness to wear tiny costumes.

But Kyle, who has nearly 70,000 followers on Instagram (via the name mycatkyle) is no ordinary Internet cat. That's because about seven years ago, the rescue witnessed a murder — a case of domestic violence that ended fatally in Indiana.

"It's always been this really fascinating fact that we've known about him," said Jen Rice, the cat's owner, who lives in Jamaica Plain and works for a local university. "When he started gaining more followers on Instagram, people said, 'Tell me about the murder.'"

Now, Rice said, she's been putting Kyle's celebrity to good use, raising funds and awareness for pet-friendly domestic violence shelters — places where victims can escape an abusive relationship and take their pets with them, or where victims can be assured their pets will be cared for offsite.

"I started Googling domestic violence and pets and found out there's this huge need for domestic violence shelters to accept pets," she said. "Until I got Kyle I didn't even know there was this dire need."

Rice has raised thousands by selling merchandise (shirts, plush toys, pillows, fashion accessories) featuring Kyle's lovable face, or by accepting money from companies to feature their products in her feed. All the proceeds go to an organization dedicated to the issue called RedRover, and the New York City Urban Resource Institute's People and Animals Living Safely program.

According to The National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, nearly three-quarters of abuse survivors say their partner injured or threatened a family pet, and more than half end up having to leave their pets in the care of their abusive partners when they flee violence. Nearly half of survivors said they delayed leaving home due to concerns about their animals.

And right now, she said, just 5 percent of domestic violence shelters allow victims to bring their pets with them.

In the months since Rice started her campaign to leverage Kyle's star power, she said she's been thrilled to see so many of her cat's fans have chipped in, spread the word or tweeted using the hashtag#CatsAgainstDV.

Judge criticized by Trump unseals documents in Trump University case

Trump is fighting a lawsuit that accuses his school venture of misleading thousands of people who paid up to $35,000 for seminars to learn about the billionaire's real estate investment strategies.

A judge, called a "hater" by Donald Trump for his handling of a lawsuit related to the businessman's Trump University real estate school, has unsealed documents related to the case.

In an order signed on Friday, U.S. District Judge Gonzalo Curiel said that materials, including Trump University procedures on dealing with students and the media, should be unsealed.

Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

He noted they had already been published by the media organization Politico and that a magistrate judge described them previously as "routine" and "commonplace."

At a rally in San Diego on Friday, Trump criticized Curiel for his handling of the Trump University case.

"I have a judge who is a hater of Donald Trump. A hater. He's a hater," Trump said.

"We're in front of a very hostile judge. The judge was appointed by Barack Obama," Trump said, adding he believed Curiel was Mexican.

Curiel is an American who was born in East Chicago, Indiana, and graduated from the Indiana University School of Law.

Legal scholars said Trump could face consequences for slamming the judge, although many speculated that Curiel was unlikely to sanction him formally.

"Mr. Trump's conduct could be subject to sanction for indirect criminal contempt of court," said Charles Geyh, a legal ethics expert at the Indiana University Maurer School of Law.

"He has impugned the honesty of the judge in a pending case, and has done so in the context of a political rally that seems calculated to intimidate by inciting anger among his supporters," he said.

Arthur Hellman, an expert on federal courts and judicial ethics at the University of Pittsburgh School of Law, said the judge was in a difficult position.

"He can't respond directly. He's not supposed to talk out of court about proceedings before him. Judges have gotten into trouble defending themselves from attacks. The judge's hands are really tied," he said. REUTERS

BRACE FOR IMPACT

What's the difference between the Stanley Cup playoffs and this presidential race? I'm pretty sure someone will lose some teeth in one. The other involves ice skating. Here are my three things to watch this week in politics.

CALIFORNIA, HERE WE COME
While the Golden State primaries do not happen until June 7, this week all eyes will be on the West Coast. Many Dems hoped it would be a formality for their party like it will be for the Repubs. But Hillary Clinton is once again struggling to shake off a strong surge by Bernie Sanders, and if she stumbles the fault lines in the Democratic Party could grow even deeper. But she needs to tread carefully: Sanders' loyal followers seem to dig in harder every time a Clinton supporter takes a swipe at them, and I'll repeat what I've said before — she needs them all if she's going to take the nomination and survive Typhoon Trump.

I FOUGHT THE LAW
It's becoming a pattern. Republican Donald Trump books an arena, thousands of admirers show up, and the whole shebang is met by scores of angry protestors. So far most of the clashes with lawmen trying to keep the peace have been relatively benign. But I've been around this kind of thing, and I fear the growing violence between protestors suggests one of these affairs could get way out of hand. Whichever side you're on, watch yourself, kids. Pretty much everyone is fine with a peaceful protest, but broken noses aren't Democratic or Republican — they just hurt.

TOM FOREMAN
Opinion

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the new book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

WARMING THE LEFTOVERS
If you think you've heard the last of Clinton's email troubles, or the kerfuffle about a possible Trump/Sanders debate (which, as of this writing, is dead) well ... you haven't. We're entering that part of the campaign where every potentially damaging item will be paraded through the streets beneath torches and pitchforks as long as possible. Get used to it. The only thing that will push one scandal out of the headlines between now and November will be the next one. Sigh.

Johnny Depp's first wife doesn't believe Amber Heard

Last week, Amber Heard filed for divorce from her husband of 15 months, Johnny Depp, accusing the star of hitting her with a cellphone and being abusive throughout their relationship.

Lori Anne Allison, who was married to Johnny Depp from 1983 to 1985, has come forward to defend her former husband, saying that he "isn't capable of hurting anyone" and "would never lay a hand on a woman," TMZ reports.

She describes Depp as a "soft person" who never got physically abusive with her or even screamed.

Allison, then a makeup artist, married Depp when she was 25 and he was 20. Though their marriage only lasted for two years, the pair remains friends and talked recently when she offered her condolences after the death of Depp's mother.

Depp is currently on tour with his band Hollywood Vampires in Europe and is definitely not shying away from the stage despite current legal drama.

Adele buys a swanky SoCal mansion

After reportedly getting ready to sign a $130 million record deal with Sony (which would be the biggest record deal of all time for a female artist), Adele purchased a 6,600-square-foot home in Beverly Hills, which includes four bedrooms, six bathrooms, a pool, treehouse and even an outdoor train set.

The property lists for $9.9 million, but the 28-year-old singing sensation nabbed it for $9.6 million. Her new neighbors will include fellow A-listers Jennifer Lawrence, Ashton Kutcher and Cameron Diaz.

Although the mansion is hers, Adele won't be moving in right away due to her nonstop touring schedule which has her performing through November. Looks like "rolling in the deep" has turned into "rolling in deep pockets" for this young star.

Keira Knightley criticized by former director

Ouch! In a recent interview with British newspaper The Independent, John Carney, who directed Keira's 2013 film "Begin Again," blasts the actress for her lack of acting skills as well as for having a "constant entourage."

He says: "Keira's thing is to hide who you are and I don't think you can be an actor and do that."

He adds: "I don't want to rubbish Keira, but you know it's hard being a film actor and it requires a certain level of honesty and self-analysis that I don't think she's ready for yet and I certainly don't think she was ready for on that film."

Carney also disapproved of Knightley's large entourage because it made getting any "real work done" difficult.

Talk about burning a bridge! It's safe to say that these two won't be working together anytime soon.

Balancing act

Cirque du Soleil's "Kurios" popped up for its run at Suffolk Down through July 10. The steampunk-inspired fantasyland raised its big top last week and brings its cast of 116 acrobats, musicians, clowns and other performers to Boston for a mind-blowing good time.

Ian McKellen: Acting isn't that difficult

The legendary actor talks "The Dresser" and finally getting to work with Anthony Hopkins.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Sir Ian McKellen plays the longtime assistant to an esteemed stage actor (Anthony Hopkins) in "The Dresser," a TV movie that just premiered on Starz. STARZ

Ian McKellen is already besties with Patrick Stewart. Why not Anthony Hopkins, too? The two English legends of stage and screen appear together in "The Dresser," a Starz TV movie take on Ronald Harwood's beloved 1980 play. Hopkins plays a grouchy, aging, self-destructive stage favorite whose latest performance of "King Lear" may be his last. McKellen takes on the role of his longtime "dresser," who has spent decades helping him backstage. Incredibly, it's the first time the two Sirs have worked together, despite being in the same National Theater company when they were younger.

McKellen, newly 77, talks to us from London about his own stint as Lear in 2007, and being glad he didn't become a movie star until later in life.

It's amazing you and Anthony Hopkins have never worked together before.

There aren't many scripts for two stage actors where they have equally good parts. I can think of "Othello" or "Uncle Vanya." And then there's "The Dresser." But there aren't many opportunities. So if anyone wants to see us together they have to write a script.

Your characters have spent most of their lives working together. How do you convey that deep history together?

[Long pause] It's called acting, isn't it, really? [Chuckles] You basically learn the lines and use your imagination. Not as difficult as it seems.

"The Dresser" takes place during a performance of "King Lear," which you did in 2007. How were your experiences doing it back then?

It's very rewarding, of course, but it's not easy. You can't play King Lear unless you get a cast of remarkable actors in all the other parts. It's not a one-man show. But Lear is the highest pinnacle in the range of Shakespeare's mountains. Still, I don't think there's ever been a Lear who was ever satisfied with his performance. A number of actors returned to it. [Laurence] Olivier played it twice, John Gielgud played it three times. Maybe I'll go back to it sometime.

You're a movie star now, but you weren't doing a ton of film until the 1990s, when you were in your 50s. Were you averse to movies?

I think I've made a film a year for the last 60 years. But you might not have seen them because they're not very good. [Laughs] The best parts in English movies for English actors were going to Tom Courtenay and Albert Finney and Alan Bates and Michael Caine. They were much quicker off the mark than I was. It didn't worry me. I was enjoying being in the theater. I wasn't a frustrated film actor at all. But by the time films came my way I was competent enough to discover film acting, which is not the same as theater acting. I just had to do a number of smallish parts to prepare myself.

Do you think it was best to find fame later in life?

By that point the fame that comes with big movies was something I could handle. I'm very lucky — very, very lucky. I don't know how young actors who become very famous or celebrated do it. It would have been very difficult for me.

5 Bras every woman needs

Your back will thank us.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

Have you taken a serious look at your lingerie drawer lately? Do you still have bras from college hanging out in there? Are those holes in your favorite lacy number? Or is your posture just terrible? It's time for an edit.

We hit up one of our favorite lingerie boutiques, Rigby & Peller, formally known as Intimacy, for five updates to make ASAP. Lingerie styling expert Jennifer O'Connell picks out the essentials.

T-shirt bra

Wearing a white T-shirt to work? A T-shirt bra — a smooth bra you can wear under a thin top without it showing through — will be your best friend. "You don't want anyone staring," says O'Connell.

MARIE JO JANE BRA, $136

A statement bra

You know, that hot-pink lacy number or floral demi cup that makes you feel like Anita Ekberg in "La Dolce Vita." "These are your confidence boosters," says O'Connell. "Maybe you're the only one who is going to see it, but it will make you feel good all day. And if your strap shows, you're like 'yeahhh.'"

MARIE JO LAVENTURE AZUMA FLOWERED BRA, $130

A convertible bra

A convertible bra is a bra with removable straps that works with a variety of outfits. "It's a necessity for strapless tops, tops or dresses with one strap and especially racerback tank tops," says O'Connell.

MARIE JO AVERO BALCONETTE BRA, $131

Sports bra

If you're hitting the gym, O'Connell recommends going for a cup-sized sports bra instead of the low-impact ones which are sized small, medium or large.

"You want cup separation just like with your regular bra, and extra support when you're doing physical activities," she advises.

ANITA ACTIVE SPORTS BRA BLACK & GREEN, $73

Why you need to schedule a fitting

Sorry, most of us aren't the standard 34B that big-box stores carry, and wearing a bra that fits you well is crucial. According to O'Connell, most women who aren't getting the proper support complain about the following: back pain, poor posture, shoulder pain, headaches and insecurity. And wearing an ill-fitting bra can contribute to future sagging. Her advice: If you haven't already, make an appointment at a lingerie boutique for a fitting to make sure you are wearing the right size bra. Rigby & Peller sells bras in band sizes from 30-46 and cup sizes A-K.

Rigby & Peller: 100 Huntington Ave.; 857- 277-7887 ALL IMAGES PROVIDED

Strapless

Lets just call this bra the hardest working solider in your squad. "People have a lot of bad experience with strapless bras," says O'Connell. "But a good strapless should keep you comfortable and contained for the duration of your event." Her tip to finding the best fit: You want to have a firm back band — 100 percent of the support is coming from the band — and the right cup size so you're not spilling out.

Quiz: What type of runner are you?

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

Runners are taking over the streets. Find your tribe.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
letters@metro.us

Let's face it: Runners are a weird subset of people. But there are a lot of different types of runners, each weird in their own ways. Comedy writer and runner Mark Remy wrote a whole guide, "Runners of North America," highlighting the strange habits of various runners — everyone from the Newbie Runner to the Dramatic Weight Loss Runner and the 7-Minute Mile Guy.

We created a quiz based on three of the subspecies of runners. Find out which one you are.

1 Where are you most likely to get your run on?

a. Pounding the city streets with your favorite friends
b. A running club in the park
c. Trails off-the-beaten-road

2 What do you usually do after a workout?

a. Hit up a favorite smoothie bar
b. Shower and collapse
c. Hydrate with a beer

3 Where do you get your running inspiration from?

a. Your Instagram feed is full of #fitspiration
b. Your marathon goal keeps your training on track
c. Mother Nature, man

4 What's for breakfast?

a. Grande skim latte
b. Oatmeal
c. Bacon

5 What is the last running event you participated in?

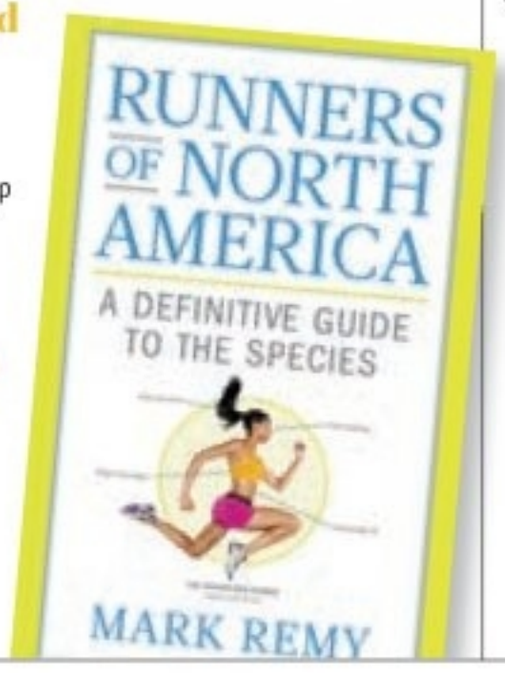
a. A 5k charity walk with your squad
b. A half-marathon, to prep you for your next race
c. Cross-country trail run outside of the city

6 Is running a group activity?

a. Absolutely — it's way more fun with friends
b. Only if the people in it don't slow you down
c. Nope

7 What do you love most about running?

a. An excuse to buy $80 leggings at Lululemon
b. The feeling of breaking through a period of suffering
c. Connecting with nature



Results: (Excerpted from "Runners of North America")

Mostly A's: The Fashion Mag Runner
With her matching sports bra ($54), tech racerback shirt ($48) and crop pants with mesh panels and flat seams in four-way Lycra stretch fabric ($96), the Fashion Mag Runner looks terrific. She runs "a couple times a week," but most days spends several hours dressed like she's ready to go for a run.

Mostly B's: The Elite Runner
As a group, Elite Runners are nearly universally humble and polite. They're just so good that anyone else can't help but seem clumsy and slow by comparison. The Elite Runner, tragically, has a comparatively short running lifespan. He or she might expect anywhere from five to 10 years of truly peak performance, meaning "years in which he or she can realistically vie for podium spots, paydays and sponsorships."

Mostly C's: The Trail Runner
These shy, slender creatures, while relatively small in number, are among running's most graceful and exotic specimens. Because of their quick reflexes, ability to speed over tricky terrain and instinctive distrust of humans, Trail Runners are difficult to spot and even more difficult to photograph. Sightings in the wild are rare but can be very rewarding.

Many readers were confused as to why Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal were absent from the list. GETTY IMAGES

Metro readers slam our top-10 NBA players list

We give feedback to your feedback regarding the greatest NBA players of all time.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Most of the backlash from my Top 10 NBA Players of All-Time list centered around Kobe Bryant and Wilt Chamberlain being slighted. Many were outraged that Kobe didn't make the list at all and many thought Wilt deserved to be much higher.

Here are some of the best reader responses we received, and my feedback to your feedback.

@CrazyLuck84: You don't know s— about basketball. What about Shaq, Kobe, Dr. Jay and the Mailman?

Burke: My response for most of these is: "Who are you taking out of my top 10?" LeBron is the weakest link in most people's minds, but let's get real. Athletes evolve. If you put LeBron, who at 6-foot-9, 255 pounds, runs the floor like a gazelle and can shoot from deep, in the 1950s or '60s he averages somewhere close to 72.3 points per game and leads his team to the championship every single year. I actually think I gave way too much respect to these old farts in retrospect.

Top 10

1. Michael Jordan
2. Bill Russell
3. Magic Johnson
4. Larry Bird
5. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar
6. Tim Duncan
7. Wilt Chamberlain
8. Jerry West
9. LeBron James
10. Oscar Robertson

Only two active players made the cut. I'm guessing Kevin Durant would smoke Jerry West one-on-one.

As for the guys you mentioned:

- Shaq is probably my No. 11, I'll admit. He was just so dominant.
- Kobe missed the postseason in his prime in 2005 and led the Lakers to first round exits the next two years. No one on this list misses the playoffs in their prime.
- Who is Dr. Jay? I assume you mean Dr. J, who wouldn't crack my top 20.
- Karl Malone is the third best power forward in history behind Tim Duncan and Charles Barkley.

J.T. Potter: It is evident you know nothing about sports with a list like the one printed in Metro 5/25/16. Have you ever played? Do you even own a jock?

Burke: Dude. I was captain of my high school basketball team, OK. We went 3-17 my senior year in a below average league in Massachusetts. I think I know what I'm talking about here.

Carlin Saafir: Russell won most of the titles during that time because he had a much better supporting cast. By the time younger players like Jordan, Duncan and LeBron arrived, there were many more teams and the league was watered down. Don't judge Wilt on how many titles he won. He is the most dominant player who ever lived.

Burke: If Wilt and Russell played during this current era of social media, Wilt would be eviscerated on the daily for caring far more about his own statistics than winning titles. The scoreboard is easy to read. Russell won 11 friggin' titles. Eleven! Wilt won two, and one of them came after Russell retired. 11-2 is damning for Wilt, and I don't want to hear about how Wilt never had a legit supporting cast. He had Jerry West and Elgin Baylor in the 1969 finals and his Lakers still lost to the Celtics. He played on teams with Hall of Famers like Nate Thurmond, Tom Gola and Paul Arizin. Wilt had plenty of opportunity to make these players even better than they were, just like Russell made his teammates better. Wilt didn't, and that's why he'll go down in the record books as the most celebrated loser of all-time.

Rafee Kamaal: Michael Jordan ahead of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is ridiculous, just compare the stats.

Burke: I thought everyone agreed that Jordan was the greatest. I guess not. Also, it's clear that I don't value stats all too much in these arguments. It's extremely difficult to compare stats between eras. Top guys in the '50s and '60s were pulling down 25 and 30 rebounds in games on the regular. Did the next few generations just forget how to rebound, or does it have something to do with the rules and the competition during those days?

Oscar: What about the Dr. Julius Erving, the Iceman George Gervin, Rick Barry, Elvin Hayes, Elgin Baylor, Walt Frazier, Earl the Pearl Monroe, Dave Bing just to name a few. If we are considering all the NBA players when trying to get to the top 10 there's a lot of work to be done. Thanks.

Burke: LeBron would tomahawk dunk on all of 'em.

Aries Emotional energy will surface and should be channeled into making personal gains and physical improvements and finding new ways to make your assets grow.

Taurus If you share your knowledge with people you regard highly, the information you get in return will give you the motivation and wherewithal to follow your heart and dreams.

Gemini Versatility, discipline and adaptability will help with any damage control necessary when dealing with underhanded people. Protect your heart, body and soul.

Cancer Stretch your imagination and offer off-beat suggestions. Your popularity will grow, and opportunities will arise that you cannot refuse. Put possessiveness and jealousy aside.

Leo Show good faith and help others. Step up and make a difference in your community, work and family. Don't lecture when hands-on help will make the biggest impact.

Virgo Cash will come your way from an unexpected occurrence. Someone will try to take advantage of your vulnerability. Look at the big picture and know when to say no.

Libra You'll captivate the people you encounter with your intelligence, charm and compassion. A proposal will come as a surprise. Greater personal security is heading your way.

Scorpio High energy coupled with unique ideas will put you in the driver's seat when dealing with others. Your ability to use current trends to your advantage will pay off.

Sagittarius Don't cave under pressure. Know that regardless of what others do or say, you have to trust in your abilities and do what works best for you.

Capricorn If you take care of personal matters, you will find it easier to make snap decisions in fraught situations. Stand behind your beliefs, and reject manipulative tactics.

Aquarius Make your home a place of comfort in order to attract welcome visitors. A positive change in your life will stem from a romantic relationship.

Pisces Keep demanding people at a distance. You can be far more effective if you put your energy into working alongside people with goals similar to yours. EUGENIA LAST
